THE STORY OF THE JACK-O-LANTERN

Jack liked to drink a lot, he also like to make wagers. One night, All Hallows Eve, Jack was drinking at a bar, and came close to falling into the hands of the Devil. The Devil sat there with him and Jack talked him into buying him one more drink in exchange for his soul. The Devil agreed, and turned himself into some coins, enough to buy that one more drink. Jack tricked the Devil, and put the coins in his pocket, where he also had a crucifix. By the power of the crucifix, the Devil could not change himself back-and Jack would not release him until the Devil promised not to try again for Jack's soul for at least 10 years. The Devil agreed and was set free. Ten years later, the Devil, still mad about being tricked, came back after Jack again on All Hallows Eve. Jack, seeing the Devil, thought quickly and went under an apple tree. Jack asked, if you could just get me an apple, I will go with you. The Devil agreed, and climbed up the tree. Jack quickly took out a knife and carved a cross into the tree and the Devil was stuck in the tree! Jack made the Devil promise never to come for his soul; again, or he would not remove the cross from the tree. The Devil, seeing no way out, agreed. Later, Jack died. Due to his sinful lifestyle, heaven refused him. When Jack came to hell, the Devil kept his word and also refused him. Jack wondered where he should go, the Devil sent him to earth to wander the nights, and to have some light, the Devil gave him an ember from hell and placed it in a turnip to be used as a lantern. Jack and his lantern wander the earth, awaiting the final judgement.
